Noh is a lyric dance-drama, performed on a special stage to the accompaniment of music. Dramatic elements are few; the principal characters wear masks and the dance-movements are performed slowly. The Noh singing, called Yokyoku, is also practiced as an independent art. The Noh mask combines with the extremely symbolic movements of the actor and the monotonic music to display a unique artistic beauty. In 2001, UNESCO designated Noh as a "masterpiece of the oral and intangible heritage of humanity."
